 so that the simplest child can purchase on the same terms, and with as much accuracy as any other customer, no matter what his judgment or experience.
 The success of this system is due to the experience and practical knowledge of business, coupled with his constant residence in the market, which enables him to observe first-hand the fluctuations of trade, and take advantage of every depreciation of price, while credit, or general, gives him the facility for purchasing goods on such terms as few can compete with. He follows the Golden Rule principle, (reducing the possibility of a loss, because he never sells at a profit, which credit houses must do, in order to cover their deficiency.
 To the public of Bellevue he offers a full participation in all these advantages, by selling every article at a price 40 PER CENT LOWER IN PRICE than the same goods can be had in other Houses.
